

Floral Guernsey

Guernsey is a very special place for lovers of flowers and gardens. Packed into this Channel Island's easily accessible 25 square miles, there is just about every floral attraction that you could ask for.

Wildflower cliff walks delight as much as horticultural shows, country lanes and cottage gardens alike are adorned with daffodils, primroses and violets. Historic formal gardens compete with bluebell woods and natural orchid fields. Commercial growers supply Britain with superb cut flowers.

Once part of a private estate, the award winning, restored Victorian Candie Gardens offer the best view across St Peter Port harbour, along with a rare example of a late 19th century public flower garden. They are home to the oldest known heated glass-houses in the British Isles, which date back to the late eighteenth century.

Camellias and magnolias often grow to be huge in Guernsey, not least in the public gardens of Saumarez Park. Its exotic species were originally planted by a Guernsey diplomat who had served as the British Ambassador to Japan. Not to be confused with the Park, the sub-tropical woodland garden and art-park at Sausmarez Manor is well worth a visit. A wide range of sculptures is displayed amongst a multitude of exotic plants, beside the small lake.

Other historic gardens shed light on the past. Restored by TV gardener Peter Thoday as one of four fascinating period gardens in Castle Cornet, General Lambert's Garden is tinged with sadness. Lambert was a favourite of Cromwell, but paid for it with imprisonment by Charles II.
